

THE LEDGEND OF THE LITTLEST CRAFTER: GOLDFUR

Goldfur left his parents and grandfather at the ponds edge and swam to the dam. He paused at the top and looked back, seeing them still watching him. He made a farewell gesture with his tail and plunged down the other side of the dam into the stream. He swam swiftly away to begin his life as an independent crafter. His father, Richfur, had established the New Colony just last summer. He had just escaped the mob led by his long time rival Raywood. Raywood by virtue of his big mouth and imposing stature had intimidated the leaders of the Old Colony. He did this by starting rumors that his mate Chatter spread with glee. The Old Colony had become stagnant, wanderlust had been suppressed totally. Many younglings saw no future and the restlessness from the suppressed wanderlust turned into thrill seeking, vandalism, and violence. Raywoods forcefulness attracted the younglings, and with them he was able to cower the leadership. He turned the Woodcutters against the Builders causing mass desertion of Builders to the ranks of the Woodcutters. Those that remained loyal to the Builders and their foremost Builder Richfur were harassed and accosted constantly by Raywoods underlings. When Goldfur was born with fully webbed feet and very short body, Raywood stepped up his campaign of lies against Richfur. He got all the Unions and the Council to ban Richfur from all contact with anyone. When Richfur was still able to support his family Raywood got the Woodcutters and younglings together and plied them with fermented fruit. When he had their brains sufficiently fogged, he began firing them up into a lynch mob. A few of the older Woodcutters and some of the former Builders snuck away to warn Richfur of the mobs intent. Since all the reaming Builders and these few messengers were all in mortal danger, Richfur invited them all to come with him. He had planned his escape during the overly long winter, fearing just such a circumstance. This small band escaped through a pass Richfur had discovered. He had also constructed a few traps to slow down or halt any danger of pursuit. Again Richfur had come out on top at Raywoods expense, but as before Raywood put a different slant on the events; claiming victory at having chased the traitors out of the Colony for good. Richfur and his companions were forced to find a new place to live and create a safe shelter for winter. They were running out of time when Goldfur the littlest of the Crafters found the perfect place. Over the ensuing months he continued to amaze everyone with his abilities, ending with the concurring of a night howler pack that had attacked a group of younglings he was teaching. He could no longer stand the praise, and constant attention he was getting. He was by nature somewhat shy and was greatly embarrassed by the attention. Leaving was his only chance to find himself.
